What John Hill Knows of the Black Art— The White Lady of Philadelphia. In Tuesday's REPUBLICAN was noticed the advent of a colored man, named John Hill, to the Seventh precinct station, and the variety and extent of his personal property. Hill, according to his own statement, was formerly a stave man Staunton, Va., and after following the "Republi-

I've had whisky locked up in my trunk, and given it to men, and they aint dead yet. If I'd been a copiure man, they'd a been dead, wouldn't they?"

The reporter supposed they would. When John was arrested he was a little drung, and had had a fight in the boarding house where he was stopping, and his mose had bled all over his abirt. "You had been fighting, John, when you were brought to the station; and what did you let any one hut you for when you had your conjure things with you?"

drifted up through Pennsylvania to Philadelphia, near which city he has been employed as a farm hand. He is on his way back to "ind Virginia," after the lapse of many years, to see his sistera. "Thar's Rachael Hill, and 'Manda Hill, and Sarah Hill, all my sisters, down thar," he says. He is a colored bachelor, about forty-one years of age. With that love for accumulation which characterizes all bachelors of his race, he has gainered about him enough old and tattered clothes to start a well-stocked second hand shop.
The possession of so many keys subjected him to suspicion, and Lieutenant Kelley yesterday handed him over to the detective corps to be "looked over," and when he was taken to police headquarters his baggage, including his "charme" and cards and watches, were taken from him, and he was thrown into the "Prison
from him, and he was thrown into the "Prison Heath." As he is a queer character, and one of those superstitious colored men who believe in "conjuring" and dread it, a Expendicay reporter strolled into the ante-room by the cell and 'looked him over." Hill occupied the cell with a white man, who also had bad luck. His fellowprisoner was asleep and stretched out on the bench, so Hill was crowded up in a little corner, with his clows resting on his knees and his chin buried in his hands. He was casting rusfai glances through the gratings of the cell, wandering over the bare walls of the outer room, and surveying the piles of empty boxes in the yard through the dirty window beyond.

Although unable to read and write, Hill possesses a natural shrewdness, which has enabled him to fleece a great many of his own color by card playing.

The reporter looked through the grating and aroused his subject from a reverie by exclaiming: "How are you, John."

John answered that he felt very well, although his fire dealed it. phia, near which city he has been employed as a ing: "How are you, John?"
John answered that he left very well, although his face dealed it.
The reporter asked if he had his conjure things with him, and he said "that they were up stairs with his other things."
"So you believe in conjuring, do you?"
"That's something in it," he answered slowly and cautionsly. "I believe that is sich things.
Those people says there is."
John when he was searched had a bottle of whitish stuff, which he carried next to his person over his heart.
"What do you keep that bottle for," asked his interrogator. "You mean that water: that's to keep me from being hurt in the feet; people can't conjure me in the feet when I've got that."
When asked what was in the bottle he said:
"That's holy water. I got it from a white lady in Philadelphia."
"I'led she get it from a priest:"

thing in it. I don't belong to no church. I am a stray sinner."

"What do you do with the hare's foot you have on a stick."

"That keeps me from being hurt, too. I got that from the white lady in Philadelpnia."

"Could she conjure people:"

"They say so.," he answered cautiously, and than taiking in a very low voice, as if he was affaid to be heard, he continued: "I've seen some things myself. I've seen living things taken out of people—living creatures, kind of long, and with four feet. They looked the big itsards. I've seen the white lady in Philadelphia take things out of people. They was colored people who had them in."

"How do people know when they have living "How do people know when they have living " who had them in."

"How do people know when they have living things in them:"

"They doe" know themselves. Conjure people come and tell 'em."

"How do the conjure people get them out."

"They have different kinds of roots, which people take, and they say conjure words."

"Couldn't you take living things out of people, John."

one hurt you for when you had your conjure things with you?

"They won't help me from being hurt with a man's fist. They keep me from being hurt inside," he said mysteriously. "They couldn't lick me, though. If you and me were nighting, ami some one pulled me off from you and put you on top of me, couldn't you beat me?"

Hill said other things which indicated his firm belief in the efficacy of roots and charms, and other implements of witchcraft, aithough he knew not from what source their power was drawn. He explained his possession of the skelten key, by saying that a man gave them to him and then went away. The watches, he said, he won squarely and honestly. The reporter left him in the gloomy cell, a man, hanging on to the border of a black art which he cannot comprehend, and with his small intellect timpsidarkly with supersitions as rude as those that inspire the fetich worshipers of Africa.
